The Lurie Institute for Disability Policy seeks postdoctoral fellow in disability and community living policy research

The Lurie Institute for Disability Policy is pleased to announce an opening in our postdoctoral research training program in disability policy research.

We are seeking applicants with a particular interest in building capacity in community living policy research. The Lurie Institute is launching a new Community Living Policy Center, which will undertake research and knowledge translation activities to advance policies and practices promoting home and community-based services for older adults and individuals with disabilities. Research projects include such areas as: person-centered planning, managed long-term services and supports, duals integration, rebalancing from institutional to home and community-based services, unmet needs for long-term services and supports, housing, transportation, and parents with disabilities. The fellow will have exciting opportunities to work closely with researchers, national aging and disability organizations, health plans, states, and community-based organizations.

We invite applications from qualified candidates for two-year fellowships. Advanced training is available under the mentorship of the nationally recognized faculty of the Heller School for Social Policy and Management. This disability policy postdoctoral training program is part of the Heller School's intellectually vibrant community. Qualified candidates are invited to join a community that thrives on rigorous research, interdisciplinary collaboration, and supports the mission of knowledge advancing social justice.

The primary goal of this fellowship is to prepare scholars to conduct rigorous research that can be applied in today's complex policy environment. Training of post-doctoral fellows will include immediate engagement in an existing research program coupled with opportunities to develop skills in preparing grant proposals, managing research projects, developing scholarly articles and scientific presentations and disseminating findings to advocates and policy makers. Fellows will also have the opportunity to develop their own independent research programs.

Applicants must have received their doctoral degrees within the past three years and must have advanced statistical training. Applicants with earned doctorates in disability studies, gerontology, economics, public health, public policy, social work, and sociology are particularly encouraged. Competitive stipends are available, based on experience. In addition, fellows are eligible to enroll in Brandeis University's health and dental insurance programs. The position also includes a travel fund to support the presentation of the fellow's scholarship at scientific conferences. Applicants should submit a curriculum vita, two letters of reference, a writing sample, and a 1-page statement of research interests. Review of applications will begin immediately. For fullest consideration, please submit your completed application prior to November 15, 2018. Appointment dates are flexible.
